Exumas, The Bahamas

The Exumas, beginning 30 miles southeast of New Providence, are a string of 365 cays and islands that span a 120-mile area of clear blue water. The two main islands, Great Exuma and Little Exuma, form the southern tip of the chain. Hidden coves and long forgotten hideaways, bays and beaches and a multitude of natural harbors are common throughout the islands. The Exumas are magnets to yachtsmen and sports fishing enthusiasts. Exuma is a nature lover's paradise kept in its original pristine setting. Home to the National Trust's "Exuma National Land and Sea Park"-- this is one of the largest underwater and land preserve in The Bahamas. The Park consists of underwater limestone and coral reefs, drop-offs, blue holes, caves and marine life, and is home to the Bahamian iguana, a giant lizard-like creature. Georgetown, Exuma's capital, was once suggested to be the capital city of The Bahamas because of Elizabeth Harbour; which has a draft of 16 feet and ultimately made Exuma a favorite pirate haunt. Since the 1950s, the harbor has been the site of the Family Island Regatta -- the race of Bahamian-made sailboats.
